Choosing the Right Enclosure

The first step to caring for a Jackson's chameleon is to choose the right enclosure. The enclosure should be at least 2 feet wide, 2 feet deep, and 4 feet tall. It should be made of a sturdy material, such as glass or acrylic, and it should have a secure lid. The enclosure should also have plenty of ventilation, and it should be placed in a warm, well-lit area.

Feeding Your Chameleon

Jackson's chameleons are insectivores, which means that they eat insects. The best way to feed your chameleon is to offer a variety of insects, such as crickets, dubia roaches, and mealworms. You should also offer your chameleon a source of calcium, such as a cuttlebone or a calcium supplement.

Caring for Your Chameleon

In addition to feeding your chameleon, you will also need to provide it with fresh water, a basking spot, and a hiding place. The fresh water should be changed daily, and the basking spot should be kept at a temperature of 85-90 degrees Fahrenheit. The hiding place should be a dark, enclosed space where your chameleon can feel safe.
