In her poem "This Is a Photograph of Me," Atwood writes:

> "I am a white polar bear > in a world of water."

The stark contrast between the white bear and the water evokes a sense of isolation and vulnerability, mirroring the speaker's own feelings of being an outsider in a world that often feels alien and incomprehensible.

Atwood's poetry is also a powerful voice for challenging societal norms and gender roles. She fearlessly exposes the inequalities and injustices faced by women in a patriarchal society, using her words as a weapon to dismantle oppressive structures.

In her poem "The Female Body," Atwood writes:

> "You are a mirror in which I see > my own mortality > my own decay > and my own beauty."

Through this poem, Atwood explores the complex relationship women have with their bodies, examining the ways in which society objectifies and commodifies the female form while simultaneously denying women ownership over their own bodies.

"Selected Poems 1965-1975" is a timeless masterpiece that continues to resonate deeply with readers today. Atwood's powerful imagery, astute observations, and lyrical prowess have earned her a place among the most celebrated poets of our time.

This collection is a must-read for anyone interested in understanding the complexities of the human condition, the transformative power of nature, and the ongoing борьба for gender equality. Atwood's words have the ability to challenge our assumptions, provoke thought, and inspire change.
