BEGINNER – INSPIRATION Exercise 2: Musical Emotions

In this exercise, you will use emotions to improvise a short composition.

1. Create flashcards based on emotions like "sadness", "love", "loss", and "anger".
2. Pick one card.
3. Think about what musical elements the emotion brings (ex. Loudness; rhythmic, soft, slow)
4. Come up with a title for the composition before improvising.
5. Improvise a short one minute composition (a miniature) based on the title and the musical elements relating to the emotion.
6. If you can, record the improvisation and transcribe the composition by hand or using a notation program.

Variations:

Develop the Composition - Develop the improvisation into a longer three to five minute piece. Record your composition. Play the recording for other people. Ask them for their reactions. Can they guess which emotion you were trying to represent through your song? Why or why not? Play the recording a week from now and listen. What elements successfully convey the emotion. Which do not?

Group Activity - Give each student a card. Allow them to perform their composition in front of the group at your next meeting without telling anyone what their emotion was. See if the students can guess which emotion the student was trying to convey. Discuss how music is linked to emotion.

Testimonials
